Course Description

This course will offer an introduction to Community Psychoanalysis, with a focus on the experiences of clinicians working in community settings in the midst of this pandemic and ongoing systemic racism. The course aims to foster dialogue and mutual learning between community-based clinicians and members of the psychoanalytic community. The basic premise of the course is that psychoanalytic practitioners have much to learn from community clinicians who in turn can benefit from a psychoanalytic focus and sensibility that can help them make sense of and manage the sometimes overwhelming day-to-day feelings of working with the suffering of those who are most vulnerable in our society. Each class will begin with a brief discussion of the reading and/or an experiential/reflective exercise, followed by a case-based discussion of a challenging or anxiety-provoking experience in the work setting as described by one of the class participants. Class members will put their heads together to make meaning of the experience and our own reactions to it. In the last part of each class, members will share observations and reflections of our group dynamics as they relate to our experience of learning together.

By the end of the class, we aim to demonstrate how a psychoanalytic understanding of individual, organizational, and social experiences of trauma, grief, and loss and their manifestations in transference/countertransference dynamics deepen clinical work in the community and enhance its effectiveness, as well as how the experiences of clinicians in the community can broaden and enrich the scope and applicability of psychoanalysis.

Learning Objectives

1. Use Concepts of transference and countertransference to describe one difficult community-based clinical experience.
2. List at least three community settings in which psychoanalysis has traditionally informed clinical work.
3. Describe one example of a case in which psychoanalytic and systemic approaches were both used.
4. Describe how the psychoanalytic concept of defense can be useful in understanding the functioning of an institution.
5. Describe dilemmas that arise in establishing a frame and boundaries in clinical work with homeless people.
6. Describe one instance in which racial and cultural differences were the basis for psychoanalytic therapeutic work.
7. Describe a community intervention in which a psychoanalytic approach was useful in crisis intervention.
8. Describe two ways in which community-based interventions can draw on psychoanalytic theory and/or technique.
